The Tourism Investment and Business Forum for Africa (INVESTOUR) is an opportunity to discuss and advance the enormous tourism potential of Africa. A partnership between UNWTO, the International Tourism Fair in Spain (FITUR) and Casa Africa, INVESTOUR has become a flagship event in the calendar of FITUR. Its 2017 edition welcomed over 400 participants, including tourism ministers from Africa and the Middle East, as well as stakeholders and businesses from around the world.

Every year the high level of attendance reflects the value and interest in INVESTOUR’s networking and business opportunities. Since its first edition, more than 1000 projects have been presented by African stakeholders in the framework of INVESTOUR creating new opportunities for development in Africa.

Today, the rate of return on foreign investment is significantly high on the African continent and international investors are becoming increasingly attracted to the region. Recognizing this, INVESTOUR advocates for targeted investment in sustainable, inclusive tourism destinations that contribute to wealth creation and prosperity for all citizens. To that end, and in response to Members’ requests, in 2017 the INVESTOUR partners organized a workshop aimed at providing guidelines for the development of effective proposals for tourism-related projects seeking investment.

Attracting investment and opening up new avenues of cooperation between public and private sector is fundamental if we are to fully harness the potential of travel and tourism in Africa. With that in mind, each edition of INVESTOUR is an opportunity for us to assist our Member States in exploring these opportunities.

For this 9th edition of INVESTOUR, our discussions will focus on two key aspects of tourism development in Africa: fostering tourism development and investment opportunities under the Brand Africa strategy, and biodiversity as a driver for sustainable tourism.

I take this opportunity to sincerely thank our partners FITUR and Casa Africa, our sponsors and partners for their continuous support. We will continue to work closely together with our African Members in fostering sustainable development.

We trust that this 9th edition of INVESTOUR will serve once again as an effective instrument to showcase African tourism and to advance tourism development throughout Africa to the benefit of all its people and communities.
Nine years ago the UNWTO, Fitur and Casa África decided to set up INVESTOUR to provide the African continent with its own space at one of the world’s major tourism trade fairs. Initially, we intended it to be a platform where African countries, their tourism policy makers and their companies could meet with enterprises and authorities from the Spanish tourism industry. With time, given its positive impact and its success, we are proud to confirm that now, nine years later, it has grown into a firmly-established and acclaimed international forum for the African tourism industry that is open for business and institutions from all over the world. Whether large or small, its essence remains the same. The intention was always to work hand-in-hand with Africa and the African people, providing them with the know-how and skills needed in an industry with enormous potential in terms of jobs generation and development in their countries.

Last year, almost thirty ministerial representatives of tourism approached Madrid for the eighth edition of Investour, a fact that makes this professional meeting the one that gathers more African ministers than any tourist event in the continent.

Always ambitious, we wanted to arrange this ninth event differently, and broaden the base of work and common experiences, so in October we organised the first INVESTOUR workshop on financing in the tourism sector at Casa África in Las Palmas de Gran Canaria. The initiative arose at the request of the African delegations themselves, which seek to make more efficient the presentation of projects in searching for finance support when they come to Madrid every January.

During the last months, in addition, we have worked on a project with the UNWTO and the Africa Media Initiative to extract data and reflect on which use of the “Africa Brand” the African countries are doing when it comes to promote themselves as a destination. Our idea is to think among all how the joint work, between destinations that a priori are seen as competitors, can be a great step forward: that the Africa Brand becomes a plus, added to the individual brands of each country. This is achieved through communication, by looking into how to promote it in a positive way with a narrative that steers clear of negative media stereotypes, to associate it, for example, with the progress that has already been achieved in regional, political and economic integration in Africa.

Before I finish I would like to thank Fitur and UNWTO and acknowledge the close relationship among us. We are honoured to continue learning from them. Every year, we enjoy this great privilege of promoting and of continuing to form part of this event that it has now become a global forum for African tourism. And for Casa África, a vehicle of Spanish public diplomacy towards Africa, it is an honour that this meeting is held in Spain, a country that, as well as being A world leader in the tourism industry has been strengthening its relationship and policies with the African continent in recent years. INVESTOUR is undoubtedly one of the elements that has contributed, edition by edition, that Africa and Spain are ever closer.
IFEMA is again staging one of the major benchmark platforms of the Africa Brand in the field of tourism on occasion of the 9th edition of the INVESTOUR FORUM, which is again being hosted by FITUR, providing a space for encounters, business and dialogue between governments, institutions and businesspeople from different countries to drive this growing activity forward in a continent with extraordinary potential for development and investment.

At FITUR, one of our most emblematic trade fairs and the quintessential international reference for the tourism industry, we are especially satisfied to be hosting this important event which, organised in collaboration with the World Tourism Organisation – UNWTO and CASA AFRICA, allows us to provide the industry with useful tools aligned with the real needs of tourism development in Africa.

The reason is that INVESTOUR’s goals closely connect with FITUR’s own commitment, and with that of the tourism industry in general, to fostering sustainable policies, both from an environmental and from a social and economic perspective, that aim to boost this industry’s competitiveness through the development of tourism projects in Africa.

Proof of this is the content to be discussed in this new INVESTOUR staging, where in addition to the impact of the Africa Brand associated with the management of the tourism investment and cooperation plan, we will debate on biodiversity, undoubtedly one of the truly unique features of this continent; the efforts to conserve it; and how to involve the local community in this endeavour as arguments to improve and favour sustainable tourism.

To this we must add an intense agenda of B2B personalised appointments, which will put in contact the agents from the African tourism industry with Spanish and international companies interested in investing in this destination; a successful format that at the last staging brought together 400 participants from 42 countries and 28 African ministers and heads of delegation. This year it will surely record an even greater influx, in parallel with the positive momentum that the tourism industry is enjoying in general and in our country in particular, as confirmed by FITUR’s own growth, with 9,893 participating companies and 244,972 visitors, according to the figures from its last staging.

A growth that also extends to the qualification of the tourism industry coming together at FITUR and which I sincerely hope will allow you to obtain the best results from this edition of INVESTOUR.
